I am a Chilean architect/ sculptor and a firm believer in the feedback process between disciplines, cultures, places and persons. In the notion of enrichment through different experiences and knowledge that cultivate new perspectives. It's this way of thinking that brought me to Copenhagen a year ago. I aspire to deepen my understanding of how sculpture relates to architecture in rethinking traditional ways of inhabiting, generating innovative combinations or sequences for seizing spaces. I study the relations that arise between a piece and its physical and social context. How it is positioned in space, the tensions and visual tracings generated by its form and material properties and what is implied by its placement in a community. The vision of sculpture motivates me, not only as an aesthetic object but rather in its relation to space, as a driver of experimentation, imbued with implications, rich in content and history.
